ADHSU members should not sign 'acknowledgement of policy' documents

NSWA has been going around trying to trick ADHSU members into signing an on-call policy document that is not in line with the current rules set by the 2010 Memorandum of Understanding (MOU).

Not only is it confusing to have a set of documents that are inconsistent with the MOU, asking workers to sign a policy in a vain hope that somehow the policy applies more to the employee, is futile.

If you are a member of ADHSU, politely inform whoever asks you to sign a policy document that as an ADHSU member you do not need to sign it. A hint to management who read this – it's hard to legally force an employee to sign a policy document, so please don't get into a dispute with our individual members who refuse to do so.
